WASHINGTON, Dec. 2 CHT). President Ford will disclose to the nation in a televised news conference tonight the terms of the recent U.S. Soviet arms control agreement as well as his latest views on meeting the deepening recession.

His press secretary, Ronald Nessen, said Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev and Mr. Ford exchanged messages during the weekend spelling out the specific numbers of nuclear missiles that will be allowed each country under the agreement reached at Vladivostok nine days ago.

There were reports last week that the accord limits each party to less than 2,400 missile more than 1,300 of them missiles with multiple nuclear warheads. The President plans an unusual two-stage news conference, Mr. Nessen said. First, Mr. Ford will read a statement on the arms agreement and then answer questions on that and other foreign

Soviet Union sent into orbit today its prime back-up crew for next summer's U.S.-Soviet space flight in what was described here as a earsal for the joint mission.

Both men have been in space before. Col. Filipchenko was commander of Soyuz-7 and Mr. Rukavishnikov flew aboard Soyuz-10.

According to Tass, the program for Soyuz-16 is very close, but not identical, to that planned for Apollo-Soyus, "All radio technical facilities such as aerials, transmitters and receivers will be checked out," the news agency said. "In principle," it added, the spacecraft plans to be in touch with the U.S. space center in Houston.

The Soyuz-16 orbit will be the same as in next summer's flight, ruling out the possibility, U.S. sources here said, that an attempt will be made to rendezvous with the Salyut-3 station, which is in an altogether different pattern. Konstantin Bushuyev, Soviet technical director for Apollo-Soyuz, said the orbiting spacecraft carried the exact docking gear to be used in July. Also to be tested, he said, is the complicated process of making the atmosphere in the two spacecraft compatible. The Russians apparently are testing modifica-tions made in the Soyuz capsule to ease the transition from one atmosphere to another.

Spain Discloses Limited Plan on Political Reform

By Henry Giniger

MADRID, Dec. 2 (NYT).-The Spanish government tonight nounced limited freedom for Spaniards to form political associations for the first time since the end of the Civil War.

A draft bill, which will go into effect before the end of the year, probably by decree, made it clear that the freedom to associate for political ends will have to be exercised within the present authoritarian political system and that there will be no room for groups that seek to replace In a somewhat defensive speech to the nation on radio and television, Premier Carlos Arias Navarro declared that the measure was a "prudent and important step toward opening a new his-toric stage in political develop-ment." He called the move "an important consolidation of the democratic process," but he

'I especially ask for respect for the text now in the works. Let no one fly off the handle through pure trivolity. Let there not be premature and imprudent corresive criticism without any balanced analysis of all the possibilities that the draft contains. This statute is perfectible and its own pace will move it ahead." The cautious and conservative hand of Generalissimo Francisco Franco and his rightist backers, who together fought a successful war against the Second Republic, was seen throughout the text. It has been debated since February, when the Premier first announced his intention to introduce freedom of political association as the key measure of a reform of state was evident-not to tolerate a return of the freewheeling political parties of the Second Republic and to assure the continuity of the institutions he began to organize 35 years Any political organization that seeks to operate outside the present representative system shall be considered illegal, the text declares. This system, corporative in character, is based on three institutions, the family, the municipality and the syndicate. They are considered the "natural" framework by which a Spaniard lives and works. The deputies elected to parliament represent one of the three.

System Is Preserved

The National Council of the movement is essentially based on the semi-Pascist Falange and is consequently dominated by rightists. The council's decisions will be determinant on who can form must conform to the movement's principles, which bar any regime based on the political or class division of the Spanish people.

The council will bave the right to suspend or dissolve an association. The government will have the same right. A limited possibility of appeal to the chief of state, who is the head of the movement, is provided for. Associations will be required to have a minimum membership of 25,000 distributed over at least 15 provinces. This is an effort to prevent a proliferation of groups. But the main bar is political. Most of the Spanish center and left are expected to be forbidden legal political activity. These groups are virtually all agreed that the present system must be replaced by another if genuine (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

Bonn Says Kuwait Is Buyer Of 14% Daimler Benz Share

By John M. Goshko

BONN, Dec. 2 (WP),-Following a weekend of mystery and speculation, Kuwait was identified today as the Middle Eastern country that last week purchased approximately 14 per cent of the shares in Daimler Benz, manu-facturers of Mercedes cars, trucks

The announcement today was made by a spokesman for West German Economics Minister Hans Friderichs. He said that details of the sale had been supplied to Mr. Friderichs by Juergen Ponto, vice-chairman of the Dresdner Bank, in a telephone conversation

The bank had handled the transaction in which the Quandt industrial holding group sold what it described as a "large part" of its 14.6-per-cent bolding in Daimler Benz. The Economic Ministry spokesman said that Mr Ponto had not specified the amount involved in the sale, but financial sources estimate the sum paid for the shares at between 600 million and one billion deutsche marks (approximately $250 million to $420 million).

The identification of Kuwait ended a four-day guessing game that had become an acute embarrassment to the West German government, Following Quandi's announcement late Thursday that it had sold the shares to an unnamed foreign buyer, government officials were forced to admit that they did not know which country was involved. Initially, it was assumed that the buyer was Iran. However, following a denial by the Iran government, speculation turned to such other Middle Eestern oil-producing countries as Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Kuwait. Along with the guessing came wave of political and press criticism of the government for allowing a transaction of such magnitude to take place in total secrecy. Daimler Benz, the critics not-

More Sophisticated Arms :

The United States has agreed to provide Israel with a series even more sophisticated weapons, incloding the Lance surface-to-surface missile, Mini-RPV (remotely piloted vehicles) to decoy hostile surface-to-air missiles, and the F-15 fighter.

If these weapons are delivered hefore a new war begins, the onus of supplying ammunition and spare parts will be on the United States.

Even if a new war were fought on the 1973 scale, which most experts consider unlikely, the firing of ammunition will lead to new Israeli demands for resupply. The American standard is that a division in combat uses 950 tons of amminition a day, The actual Israeli rate of use last year was more than twice that.

The most rapid means of supply is by Air Force C-5A and C-141 heavy transports from the Unit-ed States. This means is most efficient when the Portuguese airfields in the Azores are available to the Air Force. There is now some doubt among U.S. and Israeli military planners whether a left-of-center Portuguese government would make the bases available to the United States, which, although a member, like Portugal, of NATO, would be engaged in a non-NATO opera-

Importance of Refusing The importance of the Azores base to Israel's supply is emphasized by the C-5A performance in 1973. Refoeling in the Azores one of the giant transports could carry 148,000 pounds of supplies to Israel. On a nonstop, unrefueled flight the freight weight was 67,000 pounds.

The resupply of the Arab armies and air forces by the Soviet Union is much simpler because the sir distance is much shorter. Moreover, heavy equipment can be shipped to Alex-andria in Egypt and Latakia and Baniyas in Syria from Sevastopol, Odessa and other Black Sea

Western experts consider that the advantage in resupply lies with the Arah states and the Soviet Union because of the uncertainty over the Azores bases and shortages of American arms urgently sought by the Israelis. The United States has sent 450-M-60A main battle tanks to Israel since 1973. The Israelis want 600 more. They are not available unless they are taken from Army units in training.

Schmidt Gears His U.S. Trip To Talk of Economic Issues

By Craig R. Whitney

BONN, Dec. 2 (NYT).-In the view of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, "there are, if I see correctly, no bilateral problems between Germany and the United States that would justify a cabmet minister going to Washington, let alone the chancellor, but for me the reason for going is to talk about economic problems with President Ford."

The West German leader made that remark in a recent interview shout his Washington and New York trip, scheduled for Wednesday through Saturday. His comment was characteristic; it left no doubt about who is in charge of the West German government. Mr. Schmidt is respected by opponents and supporters alike, but not well loved. and many in his Social Democratic party say they are afraid that his insistence on running the whole government by himself could contribute to his undoing in the general elections of 1976.

The country he runs has the lowest rate of inflation-shout 7 per cent-of any industrialized nation, currency reserves of $35 billion and a record trade surplus of $14.8 billion in the first nine months of 1974.

But he is worried about mounting unemployment—now at 3 per cent-and a possible worldwide depression. He believes that President. Ford's economic policies are indecisive but that they have at least been helpful in not brutally deflating the U.S. economy, a step that would shake West Germany's export business. Mr. Schmidt is now about to pot his country back on an expansionary economic course, with a federal budget deficit of nearly $10 billion, a general tax cut that goes into effect Jan. I and an investment program of several billion dollars that probably will be announced near the end of.

Despite his strong image, is a difficult one,

In Mey, West Germany's largest and most populous state, North Rhine-Westphalia, will elect a new legislature, and Mr. Schmidt is afraid that his Social Democratic party and its coalition partner, the Free Democrats, could lose. The repercussions, he believes, could carry into the 1976 general elections.

Of his disarrayed opposition, the Christian Democrats, Mr. Schmidt

Moro Unveils Austerity Pla To Combat Inflation in Ital

ROME, Dec. 2 (UPD .- Premier Aldo Moro told Italians today that they must cut their petroleum and meat consumption, moderate- pay demands and do away with privileges and waste if the country is to overcome inflation and unemployment

The Christian Democratic leader announced an austerity program in speeches asking the Senate and Chamber of Deputies for confidence votes in his nine-dayold government. Politicians said a government victory in both votes, expected later this week, was a foregone conclusion

"The prime goal of our economic policy remains that of curbing the rise of prices," Mr. More said. He said prices, which went up 24.3 per cent in a year, could be expected to keep rising in the next few months at a rate second in Europe only to that of

In an effort to keep domestic prices and Italy's trade deficit from getting out of hand, Mr. Moro said his government would:

• Aim at keeping next year's grude oil imports 10 per cent lower than in 1973. This will be achieved by rationing heating oil, reducing waste, rationalizing the use of oil in industry, improving public transportation and sternly enforcing existing speed limits for Discourage consumption other costly imported goods by means of taxes, propaganda and by "limiting the sales of some oducts on given days." Politicians said this was a reference to suggestions for one beefless day a week to ease the heavy meat trade deficit.

• Crack down on illegal capital exports, which have imposed a severe drain on the Italian economy. Particular sternness will be used against bank officials involved in illegal money transfers and customs officials will make sure that travelers leaving the country do not take with them more than the 20,000 Hre ($30) in

Houdini Letter Tells Miners How to Survive on Little Air

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2 (AP) .-Mine-safety officials have unearthed a half-century-old letter from escape artist Harry Houdini that they say still may provide useful help for trapped coal

Hondini's letter to a Bureau of Mines consultant was typed hours after he survived for 91 minutes in a sealed iron coffin submerged in a swimming pool, The letter was found in a recent housecleaning at the Mining En-forcement and Safety Admin-

Officials said the letter apparently never has been publicized and its existence in their files was a surprise.
Houdini's basic conclusion was that fear rather than lack of air caused the death of many miners and others trapped in air-tight compartments. His advice was to remain calm and control breathing to stretch out a limited air supply. That advice remains valid today, minesafety scientists said. "I know you are doing a worthwhile work, and as my body and brain are trained for this particular line. I am at your service,"

The three-page, single-spaced letter bearing Houdini's signature was written Aug. 5, 1926, less than four months before his death. Houdini described in great detail his efforts to survive 91 minutes in the coffin on what scientists of the day said was only a five-minute supply of air.

Houdini stressed that he managed the feat by remaining still and carefully controlling his breathing rather than through tricks or so-called supernatural

Houdini complained of tremendous heat in the coffin, of a "metallic taste in my stomach and mouth," expressed irritation at assistants who shook the cof-fin, and noted, "After one hour and 28 minutes, I commenced to see yellow lights and carefully sleen." He mentioned fears that the coffin would leak and he would be drowned before being able to escape and that he was about chuck the whole thing after an hour and 15 minutes, "but, watching my lungs rise and fall, thought I could stand the strain for another 15 minutes." Also discovered was an accor panying letter from Dr. McConnell, who had been invited by Houdini to make medical observations at the pool side.

State Dept. Admits Increase In Arms Shipments to Turks

By Murrey Marder

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2 (WP). The State Department today acknowledged that U.S. arms shipments to Turkey have increased in recent months but said that there have been "no new commitments" to that country. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., charged last weekend that the United States was "escalating military shipments to Turkey despite "the clear violation of American law and the lack of any visible progress in negotiations over Cyprus."

The State Department, in effect, acknowledged Sen. Ken-nedy's figures, but said that it is operating within the law, which was passed in October over President Ford's veto. That legislation would cut off all U.S. military aid to Turkey after Dec. 10. on the grounds that Turkey violated the law by using in the invasion of Cyprus weapons limited to the defense of Turkey. The legislation, however, also carried an escape clause, which the administration is using.

Escalating Shipments

Sen. Kennedy said that the United States has been "escalating military shipments to Turkey' in the July-September quarter, despite the prohibition.

GOP Governors Issue a Call To Ford to Show Leadership

By Lou Cannon

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 2 (WP).-Republican governors, their ranks redoced to their lowest number since the Depression, opened a three-day session here yesterday with a blunt call to President Ford to provide national leader-

The challenge was made by Gov. Winfield Dunn of Tennessee, outgoing chairman of the Republican Governors' Association. He said that Mr. Ford should quickly remove Nixon holdover appointees from the cabinet and also should come up with a plan to compel energy conservation, possibly a gas tax with refunds for lowincome motorists.

The President has steadfastly opposed such a tax.

Gov. Dunn said the President bad hurt the Republican party in the recent election campaign by pardoning former President Nixon and by proposing a 5-per-cent income tax surcharge. But the same decisions, Gov. Dunn said, demonstrated that the President was capable of doing what he thinks right regardless of political considerations.

Constantine Seen Failing to Regain Throne

By Dusko Doder

ATRENS, Dec. 2 (WP).—In the last days of his campaign to regain the Greek throne, exiled King Constantine is trying to convince Greeks that he would be a "democratic monarch" if he were allowed to resume his reign.

But even his most ardent supporters concede that King Con-stantine is waging an uphill battle and that his chances of winning a majority in Sunday's referendum are as unpromising as ever.

This is an unusual royal campaign since it is being conducted outside normal politics. Premier Constantine Caramanlis, whose Conservative New Democracy party won an overwhelming victory in the parliamentary elec-tions two weeks ago, has refused to take a stand on whether the king should return to the throne.

The three major opposition parties, all of which opposed restoration of the monarchy during the campaign, have since agreed with Mr. Caramanlis that the issue should be settled by the people alone.

Critics also are attacking the from the military regime. They charge that he began to oppose the dictatorship only after a republic was proclaimed in July,

The abolition of the monarchy was approved by 74 per cent of voters in a referendum organized by the military regime. That voting was widely regarded as fraudulent. The new referendum was called by Mr. Caramanlis, who was asked to form a civilian government after the collapse of the military dictatorship five months ago. Mother's Role

The most severe charge against the king is that his meddling in politics before the 1967 coup and Queen Frederika, helped create the atmosphere in which a group of junior officers could stage a

But Regime Still Insists on March Ballot

Doubt Grows on Free Elections in Portugal

LISBON, Dec. 2 (NYT).-The military-dominated government continues to insist that it will carry out a pledge it made when the dictatorship was overthrown—that Portugal's first free elections in more than 50 years will be held in March.

But the Portuguese, watching the government as it tries to cope with three major problems democratization, decolonization and economic development-are not at all certain that the March deadline can be met.

In the Armed Forces Movement, which carried out the coup d'état against Premier Marcello Caetano, there is some division over the election issue. A minority is reported to favor postponement on the grounds that the country is not ready for it. And the Communist party, a power-ful force, is said to want a delay for fear that its organizational strength will not be matched by a strong showing at the polls.

The result is uneasiness about the course of Portuguese democ-racy. The uneasiness is fed by rumors of rightist plots that, real or not, cause some Portuguese to

Bikini Natives Coming Home Slowly After 28-Year Exile

By David Lamb

MAJURO, Micronesia, Dec. 2,-The Bikini islanders, the first etime viotims of the atomic age, are coming home. They are returning, amid some controversy, to many uncertainties.

Thus far, only 97 of the 752 residents of the Marshall Islands who claim land rights in Bikini have trickled home. Others want further compensation from the United States. Some fear that radiation levels are not safe. A few have permanently abandoned their lovely atoll that was devastated by nuclear-bomb tests.

Bikini entered history in 1946 when the United States decided that the 425-acre atoll was a convenient and suitable location for testing atomic weapons. The 166 Bikinians living there were asked to leave and, after a history

French Casinos Get Raw Deal

DIJOR, Frence, Dec. 2 (Reuters) — Two French casmos were today ordered by a court here to hand over almost one million francs (nearly $200,-000) lost at the tables by a former company director who had stolen the money from his firm.

The Dijon Appeals Court, ruled that, since the gambler had been convicted of stealing the money, it belonged to his former employers and not to the casings, at Sainte-Maxime on the Riviera and at Charbonnières near Lyons. The ruling is expected to make casinos more careful in seeing that customers use their own money to bet. A spokesman for the Char-

New Device Used to Detect Rectal Cancer

By Jane E. Brody

NEW YORK, Dec. 2 (NYT).-Cancer of the colon and rectum is often called "the cancer nobody talks about." It might also be called the cancer that little is done about. Yet, it is the most common life-threatening cancer in the United States today, and a means of preventing most fatal cases has been available for nearly 60 years.

This method, examination by proctosigmoldoscope (procto for short), enabled a doctor to see into the last 12 inches of the bowel, where two-thirds of colonrectal cancers arise.

Dr. Victor Gilbertsen, heads the Cancer Detection Cen-ter at the University of Minne-sots, found in a study of 85,000 procto examinations that, if polyps are discovered and removed surgically, four out of five who would otherwise have developed bowel cancer never get it.

Painless Removal Last week, a New York physician described another advance against this disease—examination by means of a flexible instrument through which a doctor can see the full six feet of the large intestine and through which most polyps can be removed safely and painlessly without an anesthetic. Using the device, called a colonoscope, Dr. William Wolff, chairman of surgery at Beth Israel Medical Center, said that he and his colleagues had examined more than 7,000 patients and removed more than 3,000 polyps and in only one case did a serious complication develop.

He said his work clearly

According to current survival data, 60 cent of the 99,000 will die of the disease within five years, Dr. Gilbertsen reports that when detected and treated as a premalignant or early malignant polyp before the cancer has invaded the bowel walls, only local surgery is needed in the vast

But, he adds, the procto examination—the most common method of detecting these early cancers -is included by only a small minority of physicians as a part of a regular checkup,

The flexible colonoscope is a space-age refinement of the rigid proctosigmoldoscope. The new instrument contains a fiberoptic light source that literally enables one to see around corners. A knife-like tool at the far end can be manipulated from the outside,

Thus, a doctor can see any ab-normalities along the full length of the bowel and can perform a biopsy or remove potentially dan-gerous polyps. Dr. Wolff said that, as a precaution, the procedure is currently done only in the hospital until more is known about possible hazards and until doctors develop full expertise. Mild Sedative

He said, however, that the patient rarely requires more than a mild sedative and that most patients find it less uncomfortable than a procto.

This is a lot less traumatic and less expensive than the abdominal surgery that is usually done to remove polyps," he re-marked. He said that many medical centers around the comtry were currently using the

Although the colonoscope is a potential means of screening persons for bowel cancer, Dr. Wolff recommended that, at this point, colonoscopic screening be limited to "high-risk" persons—those who have had polyps or colon cancer and those with a family history of the disease.

23 Foreign Newsmen Listed As Still Missing in Cambodia

By Sydney H. Schanberg

-Twenty-three foreign journalists are still missing and unaccounted for in Cambodia,

As the war here nears the end of its fifth year, no conclusive evidence has yet emerged of their whereabouts or their fate although a number of sightings of men in captivity described as journalists have been reported.

Most of the newsmen disappeared or were captured by antigovernment troops in the early months of the war, in the spring of 1970 but three more have joined the missing in the last

All attempts to get information from the anti-government forces about what happened to these men or to secure the freedom of those who may still be alive have been fruitless.

Queries Referred

The North Vietnamese-who have never admitted the presence of their troops in Cambodia, even though some of the journalists were known to have been captured by their soldiers—have stuck to their position that this matter has nothing to do with them and have referred all queries to the opposing Cambodian forces.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk former Cambodian chief of state now hving in exile in Peking as the titular but seemingly power-less leader of the insurgents, has expressed concern about the captive journalists. His public remarks may have benefitted some newsmen who were released after capture early in the war. But he has never provided any informa-tion about the 23 still missing.

Journalists' committees have been formed in the United States and France to press the Communists for information News organizations in Japan have also been active. Representations have been made to the Communists openly and quietly, hy government offi-cials and private persons, but nothing definitive has been learned

Those persons bere in Phnom Penh who keep in close touch with the situation say they have not given up hope that some of the journalists—and even pos-sibly some American military men-may still be alive in insur gent prison camps. But these sources say their information is still not conclusive and that they, therefore, do not want to raise

There are reports that some international organizations in Phnom Penh have made contacts with the insurgents, who are collectively known as the Khmer Rouge, but no information about the missing journalists has developed yet from these sources.

Since the first captures in 1970, there have been periodic reports of sightings of journalists -by a North Vietnamese soldier who defected, by Sooth Vietnam-ese prisoners of war who were imprisoned in Cambodian camps and released after the 1973 peace agreement, by a Cambodian civilian who was a prisoner of the Khmer Rouge in 1972 and by Cambodian refugees.

The Eriesson method of quality audit.

There are 70 Ericsson plants in 15 countries, Many of them manufacture identical components for sophisticated telecommunications equipment. Note that word: identical. The part must be compatible no matter whether it was made in Italy, Brazil, Sweden or someplace else. So the quality control organization has to be something special.

An average of one person out of every ten employed at all our plants is engaged in inspection of raw materials, production and deliveries. That is a high percentage, but we consider it arecessary for the sophisticated type of equipment we make. However, it still does not assure that the level of quality is the same in all the Group's manufacturing facilities all over the world.

So every plant also employs special quality inspectors who constantly make spot checks on finished products. They use dice, cards or random number tables to select products for a complete checkout according to centrally compiled standard schedules The checklist for the printed circuit shown on the right, for example, covers about one hundred characteristics.

The reports from all the plants are sent. to the Ericsson Quality Audit Centre in Stockholm, Sweden, where they are computer processed. If anything is wrong we can spot it fast and do something about it.

Quality control reports in their furn go to everybody involved in that specific product, whether it be in management design, laboratory work or production. Including foremen on the shop floor, who pass the word on to their teams. Everybody is kept informed about the results of his work.

All this helps to ensure reliability in manufacture. In fact it is our foremost aid in our quality activities. But quality control does not end there. We also follow up continually component reliability in operation. We run installation checks, functional tests and final checkouts when the customer is actually using the equipment. Crisis of the Parties

No one would claim that the political the unions, does not promise well for the mechanisms of the Western democracies are functioning well under the impact of global stagflation. The policies they have evolved to meet this test range from the relatively good in West Germany to the positively bad in Italy, with the great majority in between tending toward Rome's example, rather than that of Bonn's. The governments in every case rest on narrow margins of popular support; in the United States the Republican President represents a minority in the Congress which assembles today. And the party systems on which those governments are at least theoretically based are also in almost universal disarray.

In the United States, for example, the Democrats have won enough seats in both houses of the Congress so they can at least announce that they will not be rubber stamps for the opposition President. They also talk of presenting their own program. But Congress is rather poorly prepared, after a generation of presidential leadership, to assume such a role In addition the Democrats are split several ways-between new and old members of Congress, between rural conservatives and urban libera's. To create a viable instrument of government out of this mslange will require a greater degree of statesmanship and sense of direction than has so far appeared.

Britain's Labor government is at odds with at least a substantial segment of the Labor party, as became quite plain at the party's annoal conference last week. Moreover, the tensions that are rising between the government and its most highly organized hackers, stability of a cabinet which has only the slimmest of margins in Parliament and the gravest of proolems in the national economy.

As for France, resident Giscard d'Estaing has inherited, in cold political fact, a party system in embryo, and one that could be stillborn if his leadership-which, like that of his predecessors in the Fifth Republic, is highly personal - succumbs to the attacks which have been made upon it from left, right and center in recent weeks. Not a Gaullist, his chief source of support is the Gaullists, and this can be a serious obstacle, especially in the way of an innovative foreign policy.

And the French dilemma over foreign affairs illustrates one of the gravest dangers which party disarray poses for the West. When popularly-based governments are nervous about their popularity, foreign matters are likely to suffer most, whether through Gaullist dislike of overtures toward Europe and America. Labor party mistrust of the Common Market, or the residual isolationism which so frequently emerges in the United

The parlous state of political parties in the West (and in Japan) is, of course, a symptom rather than a cause, reflecting the gravity of the problems confronting the industrialized countries and the lack of the kind of leadership that could galvanize support for positive programs to meet them. Unless and until such leadership emerges, the danger that the West will try to muddle through a situation that demands much more forethought and action is real and nearly 200 in terror bombings of Birmingham pubs has finally brought home the dimensions of the Northern Ireland catastrophe to the people of Britain. Though violence in Ulster has claimed some 1,200 lives in five years, including more than 200 British soldiers, Britons generally and at times even the British government have treated the situation as a nasty nuisance, rather than a problem menacing the whole United Kingdom.

The Birmingham bombs, coming after explosions in the Tower of London, the Palace of Westminster, and the courts, appear to have ended the complacency. Home Secretary Roy Jenkins has now obtained emergency measures from Parliament, including outlawing the Irish Republican Army and glving the police extraordinary powers "unprecedented in peacetime." The government of the Irish Republic has expressed support for Britain's new measures and promised a crackdown of its own on the IRA.

It is not yet clear, however, that the Birmingham tragedy will galvanize fresh politieal efforts by Prime Minister Wilson's government to arrest the steady drift toward civil war in Ulster. Merlyn Rees, the secretary for Northern Ireland, clings to a lelsurely timetable that calls for elections next March to a constitutional convention that will discuss new forms of Ulster provincial government.

But the Ulster crisis will not wait for spring elections and a constitutional convention, even if these devices offered far greater prospects for finding a peaceful solution

The killing of 20 persons and wounding of than they do. In the present climate, the convention idea seems so remote from practicality that some in Ulster view it as a maneuver by the government to pave the way for a British withdrawal from the

> This inference is surely false. A withdrawal would ignite full-scale civil war into which the Irish Republic would be drawn and from which Britain could not remain aloof. But if Britain must soldier on in Ulster it must somehow step up the effort to curb the escalating sectarian strife and be willing to impose power-sharing on the Protestant majority. These aims are easy to state and fantastically difficult to carry out; but there are no palatable alternatives.

There is little the U.S. government can do to help; but there is something individual Americans could refrain from doing that would make a solution easier. British and Irish Republic ministers agree that it is mostly the money raised by the IRA in the United States that fuels the terrorism of the IRA Provisionals. On his last visit to America, Irish Foreign Minister Garret Fitzgerald made public pleas for a halt to American funding of the IRA. His pleas deserve to be heeded.

Too many Americans have already been duped into giving money, for what they helieve to be legitimate political or humanitarian purposes, that ends up paying for the instruments of death and terror, of maiming and murder, that now unfortunately are almost daily occurrences in the war of Irishmen vs. Irishmen within the United King-

The UNESCO Vote

The Arah bloc and its allies amassed votes of vengeance against Israel in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris. At the behest of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel was excluded from UNESCO's regional groups and barred from receiving UNESCO aid. But the people in all the Arab states and indeed in the underdeveloped and developing countries throughout the world will be the main losers from this vindictive ploy.

While Israel receives a paltry $28,000 a year for cultural and educational projects, UNESCO provides several millions of dollars for all the Arab lands. To save the Egyptian temples at Abu Simbel. UNESCO donated $36 million; hundreds of schools have been established by UNESCO for Palestinian refugee children. UNESCO funds a regional science center in Cairo. There is a host of programs in the Middle East to combat illiteracy, conduct scientific and communications experiments, and support scholars and scholarship.

These important programs are now imperiled everywhere. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has just approved an amendment to the foreign aid bill that would cut off a planned $16-million contribution to UNESCO unless the series of anti-Israel resolutions is repealed. Sen. Clifford P. Case, R-NJ., speaking for a unanimous committee, declared that UNESCO had no right to pass political resolutions straying from its humanitarian purposes. The United States now provides 29 per cent of the total budget for TINESCO activities.

This costly "victory" by the PLO has even more far-reaching consequences. Many of the leading philosophers, playwrights and scholars in the world-among them Jean-Paul Sartre, Simone de Beauvoir and Eugeue Ionesco of France; Kenneth Arrow, Hans A. Bethe, and Eugene P. Wigner of the United States—have announced that they will no longer leud their talents to UNESCO, Such individuals including Nobel laureates in the arts and sciences, in the past have provided the inspiration and cultural fiber for the international organization. Their services will be lost because of the perversion of UNESCO's fundamental cultural and humanitarian purpose that occurred in the politlcally motivated Paris action

The Birth of Another World

By Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber

PARIS.—Although the profound transformation of the world, set off by the economic revolution, will be difficult, the necessary transformation of our men-tal processes will be yet more dif-

It is urgent that we integrate the new realities of the world as it is into our way of thinking.

1. The first generally accepted notion, at this year's end, is that the main conflict in matters of energy is between the Arab petroleum-producing countries and the big industrial nations which consume it.

The oil-producing states would like to charge the highest pos-sible price (now $11 a barrel and still rising), Both the price and lts constaut increase are intolerable to the West, whose main objective would be to lower the basic price for oil to $7 a barrelthe highest economically acceptable price-and to moderate the increase.
The reality, which is now beginning to surface, is something

Stymied

For the Arabs, the most rational and best use of their petroleum resources does not depend on geton its arithmetic computation. If it did, there would result such a rate of inflation, economic stagnation and series of catastrophes (unemployment in the West and Japan and famine in the poorer countries) that the Arab countries would themselves be stymied one way or another.

This has been brought home to several Arab ministers and heads of state, not by Western ambassadors-less yet by threatsbut by their own teams of economists and planners, some of whom are the most sophisticated and forward-looking in the world. The optimum price for the producing countries—as a start—is not much more than $7 a barrel. It is on this seemingly paradoxical reality that France has based its proposal to hold a threesided conference (not bloc against bloc, as the U.S. proposal would have it) as soon as possible, Mr. Kissinger would prefer to wait until spring so that be can have the time to unify the stands of the oil-consuming states before confronting the oil-producing countries. However, now it begins to be clear that the U.S. petroleum strategy only appears to be to do everything possible to force down the price of petroleum. 2. The "Kissinger plan," which combines both the energy issue and its monetary consequences, is to lead to some form of exploitation of the energy crisis to consolidate the dominant economic position of the United

Special Fund

And economically, everything is set up for just that. The greatest part of petrodollars go through the American banking system through the use of U.S. currency. Mr. Kissinger proposes that the West codify and institutionalize the spontaneous reality by setting up a "Special Fund for Financial Products of Petroleum," The Arabs would deposit in the fund most of their income, which would be guaranteed by the U.S. Treasury. And this fund, controlled by Washington, would lend capital on medium or long term to countries with payment deficits (Ja-pan, Italy, France, Britain, etc.) Thus, the superiority of the United States would not be limited to industrial technology and systems of security for other modern countries, but would be extended to include their very means of development, their way of life and organization. This would, indeed, be a super-challenge by the United States.

Furthermore, while Mr. Kissinger was working out this finan-"rescue" plan, his principal aide, Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, was preparing an energy program, which he first disclosed U.S. economic leaders at a Yale University forum. This program is based on the premise that the specific interest of the United States, in the current world energy situation, is to maintain the price of American oil, as of now, at the higher level, that is, $11 a barrel. The Enders plan-since made public—states that the production of energy in the United States

(petroleum and other mineral fuels, nuclear power, solar power, methods under development, etc.) will expand much more quickly the world price of crude petroleum remains at the higher level. It also states that this high price will tend to force consumption down to a degree where the United States, and the United States alone, would be able to balance its payments. It goes on to say that the result of these two phenomena will, within 10 years, not only allow the United States to be independent of energy imports, but also will make it "he dominant power on the world energy market. 3. Is this plan the brainchild of a dominant capitalist system? Here again, reality is elsewhere. The first to react violently against this 'master plau" were the heads of major private Amer-lcan oil companies. They quickly realized that the plan would lead to a de facto nationalization of energy resources by the U.S. government in a very few years. And this is true

Faisal's Planners

What it comes to now is that the planners of King Faisal, in whose country lie the largest known reserves of petroleum, want to lower the basic price for oil as soon as possible and this conforms to the vital interests of Europe-while the president of Exxon (formerly Esso), the biggest American oil company, denounces the Kissinger plan and seeks alifes in Japan and Europe to belp in blocking it. How far all this is from the realities of the new world ...

4. And in Europe also, reality far from what it appears to

It is generally agreed that West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt "sticks," whatever the cost, to the United States and to Mr. Kissinger's policies. And this is what has brought about a series of unfortunate differences between Paris and Bonn. However, what is really taking place? At a time when all the countries of Europe sharply curtailed in their investment caacities by the "petroleum tax" being paid to the Middle Eastseek, quite naturally, to attract home foreign capital—and dollars above all-for long-term investmeuts which would assure them some expansion in spite of their financial straits, it is West Germany that reacts the most violently to this new "American colonization."

On Nov. 27, a private meeting was beld in Bonn of industrial and political leaders to discuss controls and limits to be imposed on the development of American multinational firms in West Ger-

At the meeting, Mr. Schmidt and Wolf Mommser, president of the Krupp group, faced, among others, the heads of the following American firms: IBM, NCR. Continental Can, Honeywell, ITT, Mobil Oil and Exxon. And they informed them that a "code of good conduct" for multinational firms in West Germany was necessary and that it would deal with, in part, the rate of their development and diversification within the West German economy and also with their relations, direct or indirect, with the administration on the federal and regional levels.

The Challenge West Germany is, thus, the first to meet the "American challenge" by limiting excesses and setting acceptable norms, 5. As for France, it refused to join the West's energy agency set up at the urging of the United States. This led Mr. Kissinger to consider Mr. Giscard d'Estaing an impenitent nationalist. But the truth is that the French President is basically right, even if he did not observe all the diplomatic niceties. If it is in the interest of Europe to have the price of petroleum reduced as soon as possible to the $7 levelunder the threat of severe and immediate unemployment—our al-lies, objectively, are those Arab leaders free of fanaticism, who agree with this plan for the reasons stated above. And Mr. Kissinger, who we now know is setting up his own, opposite strategy, is not our ally.

prepare a priori a "confrontation". with all the Arab leaders through a long series of negotiations with the United States? Is this really the only and the best solution? 6. But, at the same time, Paris would be making a serious error if it were to treat West Germany's leaders as aren's of he United States. For, if it is true that in matters of security West Germany has every reason in the world to place on its eastern frontiers all the avsilable firenower of the Atlantic Alliance it is just as true that for what concerns us here, that is, the economic crisis and its solution, West Germany has shown that it does not intend to depend on American financial or economic hegemony. Whenever the vital interests of France, of West Germany, of Europe are basically the same, theu It is not only natural but desirable that our tactical roles be diversified. It seems that Mr.

Schmidt are arreed ou that. The two leaders are certainly fully aware—and this goes beyond the recent spate of articles de-scribing their disagreements that the more we go forward, the more reality becomes diverse, pluralistic and clouded by Giscard d'Estaing and Mr.

Diversity

The authors of the Chib of Rome's latest report, Pestel and Mesarovic, explain it very well on the eve of the new "internationalized" era which they announce and describe: "The universality of problems and solntions must in no case result in uniformity. On the contrary, diversity is the key to adaptation, which is itself the key to survival." All the illustrations taken from recent events, briefly mentioned here, demonstrate the value of their judgment. There is not one United States (Exxon is against Kissinger); there is no simple confrontation of producers against consumers (the United States and Europe are different); there is no Paris-Bonn conflict (the military alliance is one thing, economic union is another); there is no Arab bloc against the West Ots prosperity depends on ours). There is however the infinite complexity of life in the universe. which must and which will find its own way: that of systematic

From London:

Tension between Irish and British is at its worst since the IRA bombings of 1939.

I ONDON-The development which British politicians feared most has arrived in double harness: full-scale indiscriminate terrorist bombing in Britain, and an incoherent backlash against the Irish community.

Following the carnage in Birmingham 12 days ago, in which 20 people were killed and 183 injured, we have had bombs in London mail boxes and bombs thrown into crowded pubs. Postmen are again refusing to clear. packed mailboxes in central Lon-don; at Heathrow Airport doors have been taken off public telephone booths so that parcels can-not be easily concealed there, and when yoo go into a pub with a parcel or suitcase it is generally searched,

Although the police have operated with remarkable speed, arresting six of the alleged bombers a few hours after the Birmingham explosions, and this weekend rounding up a dozen more suspected of involvement in earlier bombing, this apparent success seems to have done little to soothe the rage of some British people towards the Irish.

Scapegoat

The Irishman, who is as vul-uerable to the bombs as any Briton, is caught between two fires: that of the terrorists and that of Britons who are looking for a scapegoat. A gasoline bomb which burnt down an Irish newsagent's shop last week narrowly missed killing two young children and an old woman who were on the premises. There have been other cases of gasoline bomb attacks on Irish people; of scuffling on factory floors between Irish and British workers; and of threats to Irish people. The most illogical case was that of a threat to an Irish nurse.

Despite fervent appeals from British politicians, tension between the Irish and British is at its worst since the 12-month IRA bombing campaign of 1939. At that time there were more than 200 explosions, in the worst of which five people were killed and 12 injured in Coventry. Ironically it was the catastrophe of war which healed the rift between the communities. The Irish joined the British Army in large numbers, and they also made their contribution to the war effort in the munitions factories.

The danger now is that 30 yearsof gradual, peaceful integration of the Irish into British life will be shattered again for a genera-

This time the Irish had succeeded in putting down deep roots in Britain. There are nearly one million of Trish birth and five times that number of Trish descent. In the past 20 years the Irishman's situation in Britain has undergone a change which has proceeded largely unnoticed by the British. Indeed it has gone largely unchartered by jour-nalists with the exception of an excellent book by Kevin O'Connor, "The Irish in Britain," published two years ago.

In the late 1940s and 1950s the Irish who emigrated to Britain from the economically depressed Irish Republic still conformed very largely to the type of unskilled laborer or uneducated serving maid which had been typical since the first great exodus during the famine years of the 1840s.

Discriminated against in jobs and lodging houses, where the notorious signs "No Irish Need Apply" were still commoo into the 1940s, the Irish kept together and still nourished 2 wooly allegiance to the motherland, But in the 1950s a fundamental political change took place, No. tionalism began to die out not killed by the British, but vitinted by the disillusioning reality of the republic which offered little true social equality and almost no social security.

This was further emphasized by the change of Irisb policy in the prosperous 1960s. The republican government went after industrial growth and quietly shelfed divisive preoccupations such as the anti-partition movement The Irish in Britain were in general, only too glad to be rid of the old sterile obsessions. Despite the persistent wish of the British popular press to main-tain the myth of the wild and at that time "amusing" revolutionary, many Irish people had the legitimate aspiration of integrating totally with the British

By the 1960s the barman had turned into the pub landlord; the laborer into a construction company owner. Ireland began to export a "better quality" emigrant: doctors, business executives and computer experts. The Irish went into local politics on a large scale. They deliberately played down their Irishness. They were not concerned with Northern Ireland, but with issues which preoccupied all British people: housing and education, for ex-

They reached the peak of their political integration during the Labor government of 1966-1970 when of the 363 Labor members of Parliament 35 were of immigrant Irish descent, While they had traditionally voted Labor in reaction against the upper-class image of the Tories, in 1978 an Irish Conservative association was started. The Irish were well on their way to total integration The resurgence of the Northern Ireland problem in 1968 had little effect on the community. But a more direct involvement, and the first signs of backlash came following the shooting of 13 civilians by a paracoute company in Londonderry in January, 1972, and a bungled retaliator; bomb attack on the parachute brigade headquarters in Aldershot by the IRA a few weeks later. Five women cleaners, s priest and a gardener were hired Although a number of Irish political groups spraug up in Britain from 1969 oo they succeeded in recruiting comparatively few active members, although their concern was more with civil rights than with extremism.

The only way the majority of Irish in Britain would become involved in republicanism again would be if they were forced into it. If they are excluded, discriminated against and made suspect they would be left with little choice. What might happen is what happened in the Catholic communities of Londonderry and

The danger is that the Irish in Britain too may begin to feel that if they, honest, hardworking and law-abiding citizens, who abbor the violence as much as anyone are made to feel like the enemy they may begin to give passive support to the terrorists. Then the British authorities, British people (and the Irish community) would have a horrendous problem on their hands.

Letters Too Far?

There has been much talk regarding the abuses of the press on such things as poor reporting and reporting which distorts the facts. An article by Stewart Hensley (IHT, Nov. 12) is a prime example of poor reporting and

Mr. Hensley's article has the beadline, "Kissinger Wants For-eign Policy Hard-Headed and Cold-Blooded. But in reading beyond the headline, what Mr. Kissinger said and wants to do. to quote the article, is for all Foreign Service officers to report not only what people say, but what they mean and to do so on a basis of hard-headed, cold-blooded evaluation of what the situation requires" rather than to simply report what was going on as in past situations. For Foreign Service officers to size up a particular situation and distortion of the facts.

then to apprise their superiors in Washington of their objective. hardline evaluation is certainly a far cry from the implementation by our State Department of a

It might be a good idea for people of all nationalities (not only Americans) who habitually eat too much to use their imacinations more fully. For example: By placing oneself mentally and spiritually in the position of a person dying of stervation, one automatically loses one's appetite In that way, fasting to belp feed the famished populations of the world woold no longer constitute "an abstraction," nor would it require any "self-sacrifice"; lt would simply be a more sincere expression of human solidarity— "A Dream About the Impossible" (Victor Zorza, IHT, Nov. 21) come

If you want better drivers you need better cars.

Today, 80 million passenger cars drive on Europe's roads. 80 million European drivers are constant targets for road safety campaigns telling them to drive cautiously, be reasonable, stay in control.

All well and good. But it's hardly fair to expect everything from the driver. He's only partly responsible for safety on the roads. There are the car and the road itself to consider too.

At Mercedes-Benz we can't change people. We can't do anything about the roads. But we can and do design cars to be as safe as possible.

As a driver you want to show consideration on the road. We build the cars to back that up.

A driver is far more complex than his car.

Because he's only human, a driver can make mistakes. Through trying to understand the problems of the driver we've learned how to design cars that help to compensate for driver error. "Forgiving" cars, they have been called.

Our first principle: A carefully designed car makes it easier to drive carefully.

It's easy to ask drivers to take more care on the roads. But it's unfair if at the same time you're asking them to drive in cars that aren't as safe as they could be. That's why, for instance, there is at least 87 percent visibility from the driving seat of a Mercedes-Benz.

Our second principle: Cut down noise and you cut down tension.

It's easy to ask drivers to be more tolerant. But it's unfair when they're faced with thoughtless car design. Damping, to cut down noise and vibration from the engine and road, is as much part of car design as the shape of the body. And it's just as important. Because a smooth ride in peace and quiet helps keep you relaxed.

Our third principle: It takes a safer car to make a safer driver.

It's easy to ask drivers to be more safety-conscious. But it's unfair if they have to rely on brakes that are no match for the engine.

The brakes on a Mercedes more than equal the engine's power. The chassis can cope with speeds far higher than the car's maximum. In a Mercedes, 'active' and 'passive' safety aren't different things—they work together. More than 100 items of design and equipment make up the one integrated safety system.

Our fourth principle: A comfortable driver is a safer driver.

It's easy to ask drivers to be calm and patient. But it's unfair if their cars are cramped, uncomfortable and awkward to handle.

Everything about a Mercedes is designed to make driving as easy as possible. There's plenty of space and comfort, and all controls and instruments are logically positioned to be easy to use and read.

Driving a car that's short on space isn't just tiring – being cooped up can be emotionally unsettling too. And a driver who's tired, tense and under strain, far from showing consideration, is likely to react angrily.

Our fifth principle:

A better car is the best value.

It's easy to ask drivers to be happy with today's cars. But it's unfair if the cars you are offering them have been developed too fast and built too cheaply.

At first they may seem exciting. But the glamour soon wears thin when the faults start to crop up and the bills come in.

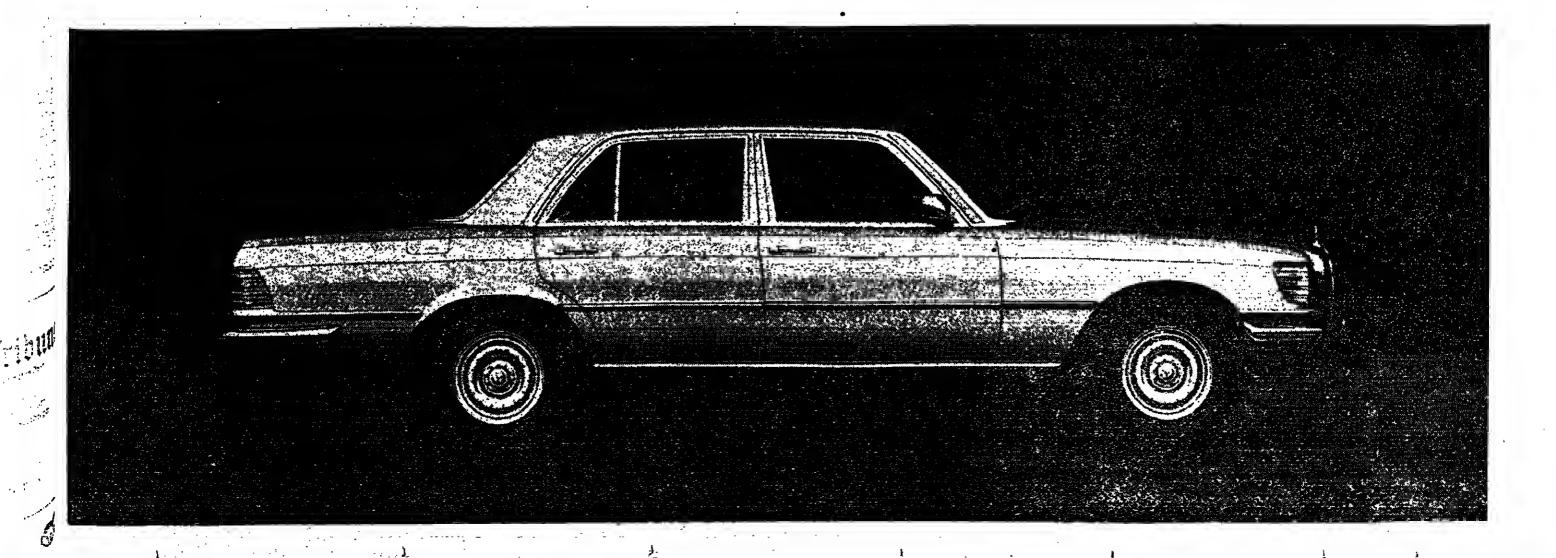

The price of a Mercedes is a fair reflection of its technical excellence and reliability.

Fuel consumption is in reasonable proportion to performance.

Running costs are in line with its efficiency. It's hardly surprising Mercedes are popular with drivers the world over. Drivers are happy with a Mercedes because it's a better car all round. Which is why when they change a Mercedes it's another Mercedes they change to.

Technics can be human. Mercedes proves it.

They started across the passage with a decor shop, Troubadour. "I did a lot of designing of carpets and bedcovers which are made exclusively for us in Spain," said Mrs. Pole. "I loved their fabrics and workmanbut the colors were too hright for Paris and their designs frankly duli.

"I personally have a great love for Persian art," she added. "and Persian carpets, are, of course, the most heautiful in the world. So, getting inspiration from Persian carpets, I designed those new Spanish ones.

Another Store

But after a while, Mrs. Pole felt like trying her hand at other "T've done work for the theater, eets and costumes." she said, "and I love to work with So. Mrs. Pole opened Shana, across from Troubadour, a year ago. "I also got some beautiful fabrics from Afghanistan," she said, "and that got me very interested."

The result is a wonderful selection of both Afghan and Indianinspired at-home dresses and coats.

Most clothes are made in Paris but Mrs. Pole has done an excel-lent job of selection by going straight to Jaipur, where she dealt directly with a distributing agent. Her clothes are beautifully made and have just the right dose of Indian flavor. The shapes are simple and she has wisely stuck to cottons. There is a V-neck long dress, with quilted top and festive hem and cuffs, with a gold thread mixed in with the beautiful paisley cotton. Then there is a long skirt, blouse and vest, the latter in a solid color and trimmed with the same paisley as the skirt. Chalet skirts, usually big and bulky, here are light and pretty because, though quilted, they are also made of soft cotton voile. To go with them Mrs, Pole has done a range of simple, slightly Victorian blouses with ruffles at the neck.

Although most of her dresses are made of handwoven fabrics and have exquisite workmanship (one Afghan dress has 42 handmade gilt bottons), the prices are amazingly low: 269 francs for a skirt, 569 francs for a dress. Mrs. Pole apologizes for the most expensive dress in the shop:

For women who can wear bolder styles, Mrs. Pole also offers rich striped silk coats from Afghanistan which she relines and restyles into elegant evening coats. She also has a couple of short, car coats of rough, handwoven wool encrusted with multicolor flower embroidery and mirrors that would look great over simple slacks and a turtleneck sweater.

There is also a selection of siler Afghan jewelry. But the hats, gaudy little pill boxes, some-how do not make the grade. "I honestly don't know what to do with them," said Mrs. Pole, who has hidden them in a closet.

Sweet Molly Malone and Cockles and Mussels

WAVERLEY ROOT

Dublin's fair city (where girls are so pretty) wheeled her wheelbarrow through streets broad and narrow, crying, "Cockles and mussels, alive, alive, oh!", the merchandise she was offering was Cardium edule. In her time this was the only shellfish entitled to the name, but the word cockle became attached later not only to all the other species of Cardium, of which there are about a hundred, but then to the whole family of Cardidae (made up, as its name indicates, of heart-shaped mollusks); by extension to almost any heartincluding eggshells. shaped hivalve; and finally to some clams which seem to have been called cockles only for want Mary, Mary was so contrary as to have described the ornamental border of her garden as incloding cockleshells when in all probability they were the more symmetrical shells of the scallop, but the dictionary now exonerates her by admitting that any shell which resembles the cockie in having fan-shaped radiating ribs, as the scallop has, may justifiably be called a cockleshell. For that matter the scallop badge on the hat of a medieval pilgrim indicating that he was on his way to the shrine of St. James in Compostela caused it to be called a cockle hat (the origin of "cocked hat"?); but in this case there was probably no intent of designating any particular shellfish hy the word, which was simply an Anglicizing of the French word for shell, coquille, since the scalion which was St. James's symbol is in French St. James's shell-cognile St. Jacques.

Cardium edule, the original cockle, has not, so far as I know, been acclimated in America. Its range in Europe, however, is considerably broader than that often attributed to it, the British Isles -dubious per se, for presumably any food restricted to those islands would have had to be developed since 8500 BC, before which time the British Isles formed part of the European continent. The cockle is a few million years old, a little too venerable to be an English exclusivity.

Matter of Names

Cardium edule, as a matter of fact, exists oo the Atlantic coast of France, where it prefers rivermouth habitats. It is what you get when you buy coques in Paris, its correct name is bucarde, stamping it as the heart mollusk: Bucarde comes from the

WHEN sweet Molly Madone, in Greek Bous, ox. plus kardia, in chowder or cooked stuffed. the others even superficially. It is the others even superficially. It is not particularly plentiful, but heart clam. It is also called the bucarde sourdon, or simply sourdon, and the poor man's oyster, a nickname which I take to be complimentary rather than derogatory. I am not sure that the cockle exists on France's Mediterranean coast, for the exact identities of the shellfish of that area are obscured by a use of the word coque both locally variable and as loose as that of the English cockle, not unnaturally, since coque, like coquille, means, fundamentally, simply "shell"—any kind of shell,

Same Genus

The word coque has been applied to a great many different shellfish inhabiting all the waters of the world, salt, brackish or even fresh. However, it is probable that there is a French Mediterranean coque, for on the other side of that sea North Africa has a mollusk which it calls coque in French and cockle in English which if not precisely Cardium edule, at least belongs to the same genus. Also the Adrigatic shellfish called cuore di mare or noce di mare (sea heart sea walnut) is Cardium edule. Indeed the true cockle has ventured far beyond the Mediterranean, for the paleontologists tell us that it reached the Cas-plan from the Black Sea in the late Quaternary, which would be within the past million years; the prehistoric area of the Caspian, then much larger than it is now, has been mapped by means of fossil shells of Cardium edule found on what is now dry land. I have read that the tiny tessyro of India is a very small cockle, but it is doubtful whether it should even be attributed to the Cardhum genus.

In America the different clams called cockles, with more or less justification, are more numerous. on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic, and on the latter, contrary to the general rule that shellfish living in cold water are tastier than those from warmer seas, the most interesting species are found to the south. Particularly abundant in Florida, though present elsewhere from Cape Hatteras to Mexico, is the giant Atlantic cockle, Dinocardium robustum, which exceeds 5 inches by 4 in size. It is tasty. even a little too much so for some fanciers, who find it on the strong side, but it is excellent the coast of the Gulf of Mexico is the smaller (three inches by two) prickly cockle, Trachycardium egmontionum, also at its best in chowder or stuffed.

On the Pacific coast the basket cockle, Clinocardium muttallii, offers itself to the clam hunter with suicidal generosity all the way from Alaska to Lower California; it is best in the Puget Sound area. Basket cockles lie temptingly half-buried in the sand, or even completely out of it. All you have to do is pick them up. Having no siphoo tubes to maintain contact with the surface, they can't burrow. They present themselves obliging-ly when they have reached a satisfactorily edible size, about three inches long.

Right for Eating

This is because they remain in the sea until they are two or three years old; when they emerge they are just right for eating. Their flavor is good, but they tend to be tough, so they had better be chopped or ground for cooking.

The bigger giant Pacific (or spiny) cockle, Trachycardium quadragenarium, found from Senta Barbara to southernmost Lower California, until recently little eaten because it lives in relatively deep water, has now become available to scuba divers. This is also true of an even higger clam (seven inches across), the Pacific egg cockle, Laevicardium elatum.

The rock cookle, Protothaca staminea, found spottly from Alasks to California, in some areas abundantly enough for ercial exploitation (and also big enough, two to three inches long), sweet and tender, but better cooked than raw, is not a nuine cockle. It is a relative of the quahog of the Atlantic coast, and so are the hard cockles, found from San Pedro to the tip of Lower California. They are sold in the markets of Los Angeles and some other southern Californian cities, where they are favorites for cooking. These are small clams, 1-1/2 to 2 inches long, the biggest being Chione fluctifraga, followed by Chione undatella and Chione ealiforniensis. The layman does not distinguish between them and neither does the gournet. The Pacific cockle which least deserves that name is the large (four to five inches) sea cockle, Amiantis callosa, which does not resemble

Several English words echo th term cockle, but it is often di ficult to determine if it is no simply because they stem from the same root as the cockle itself the French coquille. When cockle is a defect in eheepski parchment, in the form of a bulg which looks as if a small see shell had been inserted benezi its surface, the invector of th name may have had the cock in mind, for in the days wh parchment was familiar the ort inal cockle was too, and it small enough to have given n to this analogy. Japan Sets Guidelines TOKYO, Dec. 2 (Reuters).-

Local banking sources said today the Finance Ministry is rigorously applying a guideline on the rate of interest to be raid by Japanese banks for borrowings on the Eurodollar market.
The banks are being told not to pay more than 0.5 per cent above normal market rates : nder the guideline in force since Nov. 26. they said.

The move apparently followed growing competition between Japanese banks to borrow from the market for payment of increased crude oil import bills as well as the rolling-over of large amounts of previous borrowings to match long-term lending.

There is nothing to stop banks paying more than 0.5 per cent above normal rates, but this would incur strong criticism from the monetary authorities here,

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2 (NYT). —According to a recent Louis Harris poll, 65 per cent of the people in the United States think the country is now in a recession. Administration officials have acknowledged that we are in a sion, and most, economists and newspaper correspondents now take it for granted.

Supporting this view are the hard facts that the nation's real output has declined for three consecutive quarters and the total unemployment rate has risen for 12 months, from 4.6 to 6 per cent at present.

But there has been little or no discussion of the definition of recession. Generally, the designation of recession periods and the beginning and ending dates established by the National Bureau of Economic Research, a private research agency, are accepted by both government and private economists.

For more than 50 years, the burean has studied alternating periods of business expansion and contraction in order to chart their progress, identify cyclical peaks and troughs, and analyze the first three quarters of this year whereas total employment rose about I per cent during this The bureau considers a recession to have occurred when there has been an extended, substantial, widespread decline in aggregate economic activity — or duration, depth, and diffusion, A rough translation of the bureau's qualitative definition of a recession into a quantitative one, that almost anyone can use, might run like this: In terms of duration—declines in real GNP for two consecutive quarters and a decline in industrial production over a six-month period. In terms of depth—a 1.5-per-cent decline in real GNP, a 1.5-per-cent drop in non-agricultural employment, and a two-point rise in unemployment to a level of at least 6 per cent.

In terms of diffusion—a decline in non-agricultural employment more than 75 per cent of industries, as measured over six-month spans, for six months or

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 2 capacity of 1.6 million barrels of (AP).—Venezuela is on the brink oil a day, production equipment capable of handling some 3.5 million barrels daily, hundreds of miles of pipelines, storage facilities for 67 million barrels of crude and 85 million barrels of refined products and terminal facilities at Venezuelan ports.

Nationalization will serve as the corneratone for "Venezuela's true economic independence" and will trigger the country's industrial development, says Carlos Andres Perez, Venezuela's 52-year-old

The nine-month-old center-left government has promised to pay the foreign companies a "fair" but still undetermined compensation which will not exceed net book value of assets, and to continue supplying oil to its traditional markets, the United States and Canada. Following his victory in the December 1973 presidential elections, Mr. Perez promised his 11 million countrymen that his administration would "carefully and responsibly" proceed to na-tionalize the oil industry within the first two years of his five-year term in office.

The score of foreign oil companies have invested a total of approximately $4.7 billion in Venezuela's off industry, which employs about 22,000 persons, all but 800 of them Venezuelans, Estimated Value

Unofficial estimates, allowing for depreciation and amortization, place the companies' net book value at approximately $1.4 billion. Venezuela currently exports some 1.5 million barrels a day to the U.S. eastern seaboard for home and industrial consumption. Another 350,000 barrels go to Canada daily and about 270,000 to the countries of the European Common Market. The rest is sold to Latin American neighbors and is used domestically.

Oil earnings this year are officially estimated at more than $10 billion, triple the amount earned last year.

Mr. Perez has said that the soaring oil income has placed the nation in a position to acquire the technology it requires as well as train Venezuelans at home and abroad to work in the oil industry.

A central bank spokesman said today's move increased the previously-existing levy on increased foreign-owned franc balances from 11.2 per cent on sight deposits and 8.4 per cent on fixed term deposits.

The national bank's action was obviously intended to make Swiss banks reluctant to accept large sums of non-resident foreign funds. Only amounts of more than 50,000 francs ($17,000) are affected by the ruling.

Speculators Discouraged

Foreign speculators have recently been discouraged from sending their money into Switzerland by the imposition of a 12-per-cent annual levy on nonresident deposits.

How Chemical Bank helps supply financial energy for a changing world.

Financial energy is not just money. It is Chemical Bank's method of using money in the kind of imaginative and effective ways that make things happen.

Like using financial energy to generate other kinds of energy. Through everything from product and project financing to specially designed programs involving leasing and commercial financing.

Our financial energy is developing new ways to use energy.

The energy crisis is making coal look more interesting than it has in years. And Chemical Bank is deeply involved. Through a highly innovative leveraged leasing plan, our financial energy is transforming coal into electricity at a major steam-generating plant in the Northern United States.

At the same time, we are financing a uranium mine and milling complex in America's Southwest.

In Southern Italy, we're involved in the building of a major petro-chemical complex. And, in the North Sea, in the construction of

we are playing a leading role in a multi-million dollar loan to Sonatrach, the Algerian state oil and gas concern. In the Alaskan North Slope explorations. In a cross-Canada oil pipeline. In the construction of giant tankers to carry gas from Indonesia to Japan. And countless other projects.

Expertise around the globe.

Chemical Bank can undertake many of these projects on a non-recourse basis. Because our Petroleum and Minerals Division is staffed with banking experts including geologists and engineers. They can make evaluations of mineral and petroleum deposits and base their banking decisions on them.

If you have a project that could use some financial energy, talk to your Chemical Bank representative.

DOCTOR FRIGO

IKE most other paranoids I Loften suspect that in the world I live in there is an awful lot of intrigue going around. The author of an intrigue novel simply plays dress-up games with such fantasies, clothing them in terms of spies, double-agents, conspira-

One of the comforts of reading these books is that the conspiracies are rational, revolving around the quest for things like power or a certain bit of information; no matter how mysterious the goings-on, things withmately do make sense.

Another attraction is that the range of the genre offers us a choice of how to work out our fantasies through reading. We can, if we wish, counterattack successfully by identifying with 2 protagonist who is supercom-petent, like James Bond.

Then there are the more humanly competent characters who inhabit the world of thrillers by such writers as Graham Greene and John Le Carré; here the results are usually mixed. gritty or downright bleak—a more realistic fantasy, if you will. Finally, we have novels of intrigue about incompetents; or if that's too harsh, innocents, ordinary people who get involved beyond their depth with professionals. In a Helen Macinnes novel, for example, it's usually an attractive young woman traveling abroad who somehow gets mixed up with the competing secret services of at least four countries, and who only gets out of it with the help of an attractive, competent man. Eric Ambler, too, has made something of a specialty of the incompetent imposent. As far back as 1939, in "A Coffin For Dimitrios," he included in a his of self-parody when he portrayed an English writer's amateurish search for the facts of the career of the master-spy Dimitrios, erroneously presumed dead at the outset. More recently, in "A Kind Of Anger" (which became the movie "Topkani") and "Dirty Story," he has chronicled the mishaps of his autihero, Arthur Abdel Simpson, an illegitimate Anglo-Egyptian who is a coward, a liar, a cheat and a total failure as a minor secret agent who always ends up on the wrong end of a

In "Doctor Frigo," Ambler is not working with quite such a boob. Nor is there anything at all sleazy about Dr. Castillo. He shims politics, a reaction to the career of his father an opportunist Central American leader assassinated years earlier. He is con-tent with his practice, his mis-tress and a life of exile on the Island of St. Paul-les-Alizes. A French security officer pres-sures him into attending Manuel

Villegas, head of the party formerly led by Dr. Castillo's fathe and a temporary guest on the Island. Villegas is backed by a international consortium wanting offshore oil rights belonging Dr. Castillo's native country as ruled by the oligarchy. The co sortium expects a better de from Villegas after helping h with a coup.

-Villegas really wants Dr. Ca tillo not as a physician but a régime: the elder Castillo's to lowers are still numerous. The Dr. Castillo diagnoses a progresive and rapidly fatal disease; muscular atrophy in Villega which may upset the takeover timetable. He also learns alanding things about who recommended his father.

French security and Ville supporters badger Dr. Castillo 3 an exact prognosis and for formation on his own police intentions. He tries to play cagey, but seems unable to be a confidence, repeating every or versation to everyone else, and outmaneuvered every time.

His mistress, Elizabeth, acts; a caustic chorus. Having be married to a French intelligent officer, she knows the games are professionals play, and the rig countermoves, but her love doesn't listen. A history-obsess descendant of the Hapsburgs H keeps comparing Dr. Castle latest ineptitude to some and gous clumsiness from the Hap burgian past. A refreshing clai eyed, cynical woman. This is a wittily conceive specimen of the genre, a Ambler's description of life of rather seedy Caribbean isla-contains a lot of sentences sentence wit as well.

Part-score contracts seldom make news. Large sums are not at stake, and on a superficial view such hands lack drama and color. But in real life good. players often work harder in part-score contracts than they do in slams. There are more decisions to be made, and the lead will change hands more

Timing is often a crucial factor. In the diagramed deal accurate bidding landed South in a contract of three clubs. Note that North's raise to three clubs on the second round was a much better choice than two no-trump: Three chibs was likely to be the safe part score if South had no wish to go on to game, and did not rule out three no-trump as a final contract.

The opening spade lead was won with the ace in dummy, and the singleton diamond was led. East put up the king and shifted to the club three. This was most unlikely to be a lead from the king, so South put up the ace and viewed the appearance of West's singleton king with mixed icelings. South's next move was to cash the heart ace and cross-ruff the red suits. This worked up to a point, but East came into his own at the finish when dummy's trumps had disappeared and South had only the eight. When a heart was led from dummy, East ruffed high, drew South's last trump and made the remaining tricks for down one.

The post-mortem showed that South could have timed it hetter after winning the club ace and cashing the heart ace. The right play was to lead to the spade king, which East would ruff. The

Some Observations Against the Myth of Professional Football Superiority

You can't get profounder than that. was talking about the performance of a 22id quarterback of towering obscurity named Longley, a performance so incredible it was cally unbelievable. Flung into a championship for the first time in his life when Roger ach got the wobbles, young Longley put back-nto a team that was groveling at the fect of ashington Redskins.

the Cincinnati Bengals claimed him they soon thought better of it and shuffled him off to Dallas. When he replaced Staubach Thursday, he had never played for keeps in the National Football League and didn't know what it meant to be smacked by Diron Taibert or Chris Hanburger, so when those carnivores came thundering down on bim he stood there without fear, searching for an open receiver. Just doing what came naturally, he ied a besten team to victory and left one of the progame's treasured fictions shot full of holes.

Peddling Malarkey

This is the myth that after a college player or college coach culists with the Hessians he needs years of apprenticeship before he can back it in the professional game. Flacks have peddled malarkey so long in an effort to lend a spurious mystique to their product that the public now believes that the postgraduate game is to campus football as Lobachevsky's geometry is to simple arithmetic.

The truth is, pro football is a simplification of the undergraduate game, but we realize this only when a kid like Longiey walks in from nowhere and shows us how easy it is.

Hours before Longley's performance, some observations on this theme were received from Col. Earl Blaik, whose 18 years as coach at West Point raised

Army football to heights unreached before or since. Some of his comments appear in "The Red Blak Story," which Arlington House is bringing out: "With rare exceptions, the pro coach is not an imagmative innovator but one who takes the exist-ing excellent college product and systems long in use in the college game and attempts to improve upon them. The college coaches evolve the original thinking and strategy; the process of change in American football flows up to and not down from Blaik goes on to list a raft of players like Johnny Lujack, Sid Luckman, Jim Plunkett, Joe Namath and Dick Butkus who made it hig as first-year pros, and any number of college coaches who enriched the pro game. Two of the latter, Vince Lombardi and Sid Gillman, won their wings as Blatk's assistants at West Point and Chuck Knox of the Rams worked for another Blaik assistant, Paul Amen.

Since 1940 when Clark Shaughnessy introduced the modern T-formation at Stanford, virtually every new development has come from the culture quarries. Shaughnessy, Lou Little with the winged-T, Don Faurot with the split-T and Dave Nelson with his misdirection and cross-blocking, Black with his and Illinois—those are the original thinkers. If it weren't for them and their campus colleagues, the pros would still be using the flying wedge and regarding George Woodruff's guards-back formation with suspicion.

The most timorous creature of woods or field is the professional football coach. Not daring to experiment, he imitates, plagiarizing the work of better men and reducing it to fundamentals that he can grasp. The result is a gray sameness, with every team setting up in identical offensive and defensive formations and employing the same tactics over and over again, world without end, amen. Because they are remarkable physical specimens to begin with and spend all their time practicing a few feats of strength, speed or dexterity, some individual players become marvelously proficient at their specialities. When they put all their skills together in the closing minutes they can make spectators forget the dreary hours that led up to the climar.

· Most of the time, though, the action is predictable and uninspired, and intermineble and deadly and uninspired, and intermineble and deadly monotony. The act is so repetitious it recalls the late Joe Palmer's story of the woman who, after laughing immoderately at a joke, said: "That's a wonderful story; tell it again."

When I confronted the assistant secretary with all these facts, he finally admitted that there was a possibility that Kissinger might indeed visit Washington. "The reason why we haven't publicly talked about it is that Mr. Kissinger might change his mind at the last minute and fly over the city on his way to Paris. Then people would be needlessly disappointed."

Peggy Guggenheim: Life, Art, Friends

By Susan Heller Anderson

DARIS, Dec. 2 (IHT).-Once upon a time, a nice Jewish girl from a very rich and prominent New York family set out to have an "interesting" life. She now lives in a Venetian palace surrounded by one of the world's most important modern art collections and the memories of her outrageous life as the darling of the European and American avant-garde.

She sleeps under a turquoise maribou coverlet in a silver bed. designed for her by sculptor Alexander Calder. In her front yard on the Grand Canal sits a large Marini sculpture with detachable penis which she thoughtfully removes when nuns come to visit

In Paris for the opening of her collection at the Orangerie. Peggy Guggenheim, clad in Chinese-red tights and a vivid e-red tights and a vivid blue shift encrusted with crimson embroidery, greeted many old friends and led them, with obvious pride, through the exhibition. Later, as she talked affectionately of her paintings, she was unable to separate her ess for them from her friendships with their creators.

A Catalogue

Indeed, the list of her friends reads like a catalogue of famous 20th-century artists, with time out for a sortle into the literary world with Samuel Beckett. But he too pushed her, she recalled. "Beckett told me I had a moral duty to interest myself in the art of my day." So, looking for something to immerse herself in, Mrs. Guggenheim opened a modern art gallery in London, Guggenheim Jenne.

Baffled

The English were baffled by her art and not the least interested in buying anything. To console my artists for not selling, I always bought a work myself, anonymously," said Mrs. Guggenheim. "That is how the collection began."

She then decided to lopen a museum, with Sir Herbert Read as the curator. "He sent me off to Paris with a long list of paintings to borrow for the opening," she remembered. "When I realized that the war was coming and a museum was impossible, I bought the paintings instead at the rate of one a day."

As the war neared, Mrs. Guggenheim appealed to the Louvre to house her collection for safekeeping. They refused, noting that it "was not worth saving." This fact is mentioned in her introduction to the Orangerie

During the war, she assured her place in art history by open-ing her now-legendary New York gallery, Art of This Century. With a sensational decor by architect Frederick Kiesler, paintings were displayed on easels made of baseball bats. It was here that she discovered and actively promoted many American painters, among them Pollock, Motherwell and Rothko.
